Privacy and Identity in the Age of Facebook

USC LIBRARIES RESOURCE GUIDE

EVENT DATE: Monday, March 28, 2011

Have we given up our privacy to maintain a public identity? How have the lines between our public and private lives blurred with the rise of Facebook, Twitter, MySpace and other social-networking sites that have made it so easy to inform the world of our every move, from daily banalities to emotional breakups? A panel discussion moderated by new-media commentator Marissa Gluck will examine whether we can control our unique identities when the Internet makes it so easy for others to participate in how we communicate about ourselves to the world. The discussion will feature Henry Jenkins, the provost's professor of communications, journalism and cinematic arts at USC; artist Nathan Ruyle, an adjunct faculty member at the California Institute of the Arts; and Whitney Phillips, a University of Oregon PhD student who writes about online trolling subcultures.

JOHN JACKSON of the USC LIBRARIES has selected the following resources to help you learn more about this afternoon's speakers and the issues they will discuss. Many more resources, including links to recommended articles, are available through the online version of this guide at http://libguides.usc.edu/privacyonline.

Web Resources

The following are some of the best resources on the Web for discovering more about privacy and identity online:

Electronic Frontier Foundation

Considered the "first line of defense" when freedoms come under attack in the networked world, the EFF provides this guide on privacy litigation, news, resources and related projects.
